B Line Test Prep's courses were designed to address some common issues that today's schools face in preparing students for the SAT, such as:

Problem

It takes hours to administer just one practice timed SAT test to students -- not to mention the many hours of teachers' time it requires to grade those tests. Your school's schedule may not even be able to accommodate a long enough block of time.

It's impossible for any teacher to provide each student with hours of one-on-one instruction. If a student doesn't ask for help right away when they struggle with a concept, he or she can quickly fall behind.

Students learn at different speeds. In a mixed group, a slow learner doesn't always get the time he or she needs to fully absorb the material, while a faster learner may get bored and start to tune out.

It's hard for a teacher to keep track of each student's strengths and weaknesses, and to know how much SAT preparation each student has completed so far.

Our Solution

B Line Test Prep gives every student the opportunity to take up to eight timed practice tests -- with instant scores shown at the end -- as his or her schedule permits, whether at home or at school.

Students get instant video and audio feedback after every question in B-Line's review segments, helping them to recognize and remedy errors quickly.

Each student can move at his or her own pace in B-Line's online SAT prep course. A student can replay a section as many times as necessary when he/she feels stuck, or breeze through mastered material.

B-Line provides teachers with tracking tool so they can see in real-time what content each student has completed, along with each student's review quiz and practice timed test scores. Teachers can spend the time they saved manually grading SAT prep materials to reach out to students who appear to be struggling.

Problem

Some schools lack the time and/or funding to provide much of any SAT preparation to their students.

There aren't enough SAT prep books or software licenses for every student to have his or her own.

Shy or introverted students risk being left behind during group SAT classes because they don't feel comfortable asking for help in front of their peers.

Students don't always know how prepared they are to take the SAT until they actually sit down to take the real test.

Our Solution

Since B-Line's courses are free and accessible from any computer with Internet access, every school can now connect students with professionally-produced SAT preparation written by some of the nation's top tutors.

Every student gets his or her own account with B Line Test Prep, so there's never any sharing or waiting. Our materials are always free, whether you have 100 students or 1,000.

By using B-Line's online test prep, shy students can avoid embarrassment when asking questions in class or with a tutor by studying online on their own terms. They can master concepts on their own time, replaying content and practicing as often as they need.

In addition to the audio and video feedback provided after every question in review courses, students can watch their improvement through the built-in score and progress tracking tools, helping them know exactly where they stand and building confidence.
